I. Questions 1 to 5 are based on the following text.

The name influenza comes from the Italian: influenza, meaning 'influence'. However, influenza, commonly referred to as flu, is a very common illness. It is not limited to humans; most animals and birds can also catch the flu. It is caused by several different viruses which is why people can have flu more than once. Human flu can pass from one person to another very easily. It is most commonly spread by the microscopic droplets of mucus and fluid that are sent into the air when the sick person coughs or sneezes.

Symptoms include cough, sore throat, headache, and more rarely vomiting and diarrhoea. The flu can also lead to other diseases, such as pneumonia. This makes it especially dangerous to young children and old people. Although there is no cure for the flu, antiviral drugs can be used to treat the illness so that it is not as severe and does not last long. The flu season runs from late fall to spring and most people can catch it in the winter months. When there are more cases of flu than what is expected, it can be called an epidemic. When there are a large number of cases of the same type of flu all over the world, it is called a pandemic.

II. Questions 6 to 10 are based on the following text.

Freedom of the press is freedom of communication and expression through various electronic media and published materials. This freedom means the media will function with the absence of any interference from government authorities.

Many countries have laws that protect the media, though in some cases these laws are not respected. According to Reporters Without Borders, more than a third of the world's people live in countries where there is no system of democracy or where there are serious deficiencies in the democracy process. Freedom of the press is an extremely problematic idea for most non democratic systems of government since strict control of access to information is crucial to the existence of most non-democratic governments and their associated control systems and security apparatus. To this end, most non democratic societies employ state-run news organizations to promote their propaganda, critical to maintaining an existing political power base and suppress (often very brutally, through the use of the police, military or intelligence agencies) any significant attempts by the media or individual journalists to challenge the approved "government line" on contentious issues. In such countries, journalists operating on the borders of what is considered to be acceptable will very often find themselves the subject of considerable intimidation by agents of the State. This can range from simple threats to their professional careers.
